Shenzhen

An aerial photograph of Shenzhen, China, featuring the prominent Ping An International Finance Centre (PAIFC) tower in the center. The city's skyline is visible against a clear sky, with a body of water in the foreground and a road leading towards the buildings.

Overview

Shenzhen is an economic special zone, a national economic center city, and a national innovative city approved by the State Council. It is also one of the core engine cities of the Guangdong Hong Kong Macao Greater Bay Area; It is a window for China's reform and opening up and an emerging immigrant city, creating the world-renowned "Shenzhen Speed" and known as the "Silicon Valley of China";

Ecology

Smangrove Park

The International Awards for Liveable Communities competition is globally recognized as the "Green Oscar" and stands as one of the highest honors in the field of urban construction and community management worldwide. The competition and its awards are endorsed by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and co-hosted by the International Parks Association and UNEP. Shenzhen is China's first International Garden City and a vibrant city. It is also home to 1,290 parks, the highest number of parks among all cities in China, with the Mangrove Park being one of its representative landmarks. Strolling through the park, visitors can overlook Hong Kong's Yuen Long district from across Shenzhen Bay, observe protected mangrove plants, and admire the Houhai urban architectural complex — experiencing the harmonious integration of city and ecology.

Modern

Skyscrapers symbolize modern cities, reflecting urban development and enhancing a city's image and influence. As China's economy grows rapidly, its skylines keep rising. China now has more skyscrapers than any other country, including the U.S. Among Chinese cities, Shenzhen ranks first with 222 buildings over 200 meters tall. The Ping An International Financial Center, originally planned at 660 meters, was reduced to below 600 meters due to aviation height limits. Completed in April 2016, it stands 599.1 meters tall, making it the second tallest in China and the fifth tallest globally. A 60-second high-speed elevator ride takes you to the Yunji observation floor, offering panoramic views of Shenzhen and suburban Hong Kong.

Shenzhen Museum

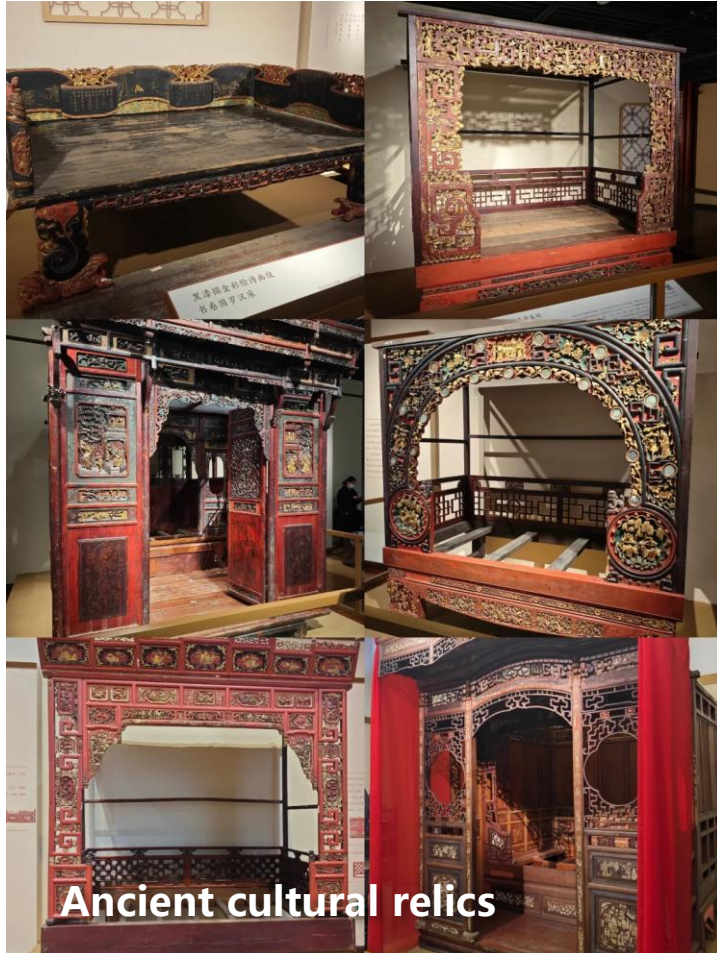

Rising Tide: Pearl River Special Exhibition

History

"A spring breeze sweeps across Southern Guangdong, as a great tide rises in the Pearl River." The Shenzhen Museum, established in 1981, is the first cultural and museum institution in Shenzhen. Bathed in the spring breeze of reform and opening-up, the museum has grown alongside the special economic zone, adhering to deep cultivation and win-win cooperation, pursuing both broad vision and fine details. Gradually, it has forged a path of rapid development marked by innovation and Shenzhen's unique characteristics. Currently, the museum houses a collection of over 228,000 items, including more than 27,000 cultural relics and over 201,000 material evidence pieces. It is a large comprehensive museum integrating collection, preservation, research, exhibition, and education.

Integration of ancient and modern times

Nantou Ancient City is a creative urban neighborhood rooted in history and embracing multiculturalism. Here, art and culture are interwoven into the fabric of nearly 1,700 years of heritage, witnessing Shenzhen's transformation, rise, and millennia-old cultural legacy. Respecting the natural, historical, and urban dynamics and their inherent conditions, Nantou Ancient City fosters a symbiotic space that is vibrant, diverse, authentic, and organically sustainable. Its regeneration and revitalization honor the original state and authentic atmosphere, connecting local communities to create a spontaneous, co-creative space where every corner has a story. This is a dynamic creative living community, where art and culture blend into everyday life, unfolding along its streets and alleys.
